Shelter Mews

Did you know that 138 years ago in 1880, San Diego Humane Society officers gave out the first fine to a man for not being kind to his horse?

Since that day, our Humane Law Enforcement Officers have been dedicated to protecting all animals and making sure that they are treated with the respect they deserve. We have officers working seven days a week to help animals that are abused, lost or needing emergency assistance. Our Humane Law Enforcement team also responds to disasters, to help animals get to safety, like the recent wildfires and floods in the Southeast.

Wildlife Window

Did you know that our Humane Law Enforcement Officers help wildlife too?

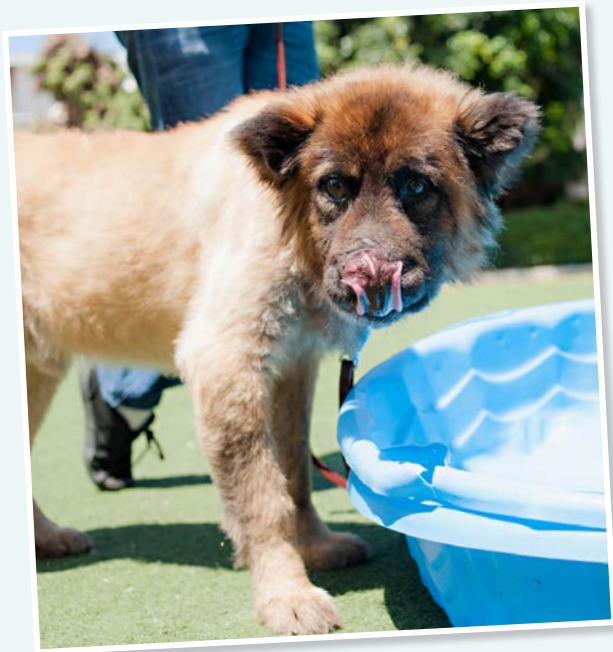

Our officers go through training to learn how to help not only pets, but wildlife as well. If you ever come across a wild animal that you think is in need of help, always get an adult first and never touch the animal with your bare hands. Then, if you are not able to safely bring the animal to Project Wildlife, you can call San Diego Humane Society to send an officer to help. Our Humane Law Enforcement officers recently rescued this adorable little bat who was stuck in someone's garage!

Meet Our Staff

Meet Danee Cook

Danee is the Captain of Operations for Humane Law Enforcement at San Diego Humane Society. She provides support and guidance to people in our community by educating them about proper care for their animals, rescuing animals in need and helping lost pets find their way back home. Danee is proud to have a job that helps ensure that San Diego's animals are safe, healthy and happy.

Lend a Paw

Here are three simple ways you can help animals:

- 1. Speak up! If you ever see an animal in trouble or someone being mean to an animal, get an adult (such as your parent or teacher) to help by calling San Diego Humane Society or your local shelter.
- 2. Be kind to animals of all ages! Elderly pets need love and care too. Make it a point to give some extra attention to an older pet or help spread the word about one in your local shelter.
- 3. Help animals in the shelter! Host a bake sale or donation drive to benefit animals at San Diego Humane Society.
